How it's made

Thread, weave, stitch

The cotton is spun in Tamil Nadu, woven in Chengamanad and stitched in Fort Kochi.

I / Nagercoil & Kannur

The thread

It starts as fine cotton thread from some of the oldest mills in South India. Before it reaches a loom, every strand is wound by hand onto a bobbin.

II / House of Kasavu, Chengamanad

The weave

Thirteen women of the Pattariyar community weave the cloth on wooden handlooms, carrying on a 70-year-old tradition. They are among the last of a community that once lived by this craft, and they have chosen to keep it alive.

> “We continue because we refuse to let go of the only art we know.”
>
> Sheeja, weaver, House of Kasavu

III / aikyam space, Fort Kochi

The stitch

In Fort Kochi, the cloth reaches the free Stitching Club at aikyam space. Its teacher, Mary Gracy, came with years of tailoring and little belief that she could teach. Now women of different faiths learn from her, then cut, stitch and check every bag themselves.

> “At first, I didn't know how to stitch. Today, I made this bag on my own.”
>
> Stitching Club member

Carry the promise.

FAQ

Why does my bag look slightly different from the photo? Every bag is woven, printed and stitched by hand, so small differences in texture and print are expected. They show that a person made it.

How do I wash it without fading the Preamble? Hand wash in cold water, inside out, and dry it in the shade. Iron on the reverse side, never directly on the print.

How big is it, and how much can it hold? One size: 14″ × 16″, with a hand-stitched, adjustable strap.
